GATHER EVIDENCE.

The outline given through The Republie by Mr. William Brown, St. Louis's Chicago attorney in the drainage case, shows what duty devolves on the city administration. St. Louis must show that her water supply is injured by the opening of Chicago's canal. It requires work of a scientific character to establish the contention, and that work must be continued unintermittingly at least until the testimony is exhaustive. St. Louis must establish clearly that her water supply has suffered from the opening of Chicago's big sewer. The pat reform. It is offering proof in itself Mayor of St. Louis does not need to wait for an appropriation from the Municipal Assembly before infusing energy into the work. Every head of a department in St. Louis should be anxious to take a part In the effort to reach a true conclusion s to the effect of Chicago's ditch on St. Louis's water supply. The Health Commissioner, the Water Commissioner, the City Counselor and the Mayor should all be vigorous in producing the necessary result.

Chicago has set about such experiments already. She is scanning the Illinois River from Peoria to its mouth and the Mississippi from the mouth of the Illinois to St. Louis, with microscope and reagent. St. Louis must push similar investigations to a satisfactory conclusion.

BRITISH UNITY.

Doctor Conan Doyle is generously justified by the facts in his assertion that President Kruger of the Transvaul Itepublic, in resisting the aggressive South African policy of the British Government, has done more than any other one man to federate the British Empire.

It must be acknowledged that the bearing of England's colonles in the existing crisis has been of a loyal character which eloquently testifies to their genuine union with the mother country. They have been prompt to furnish their quota of men and money for the prose cution of the war on the Afrikanders, they have manifested a fine spirit of pride in England's glory, and the colonial blymen open to the solicitation of involunteers now at the front are rendering excellent service as soldiers of the Queen. There is a very material guarantee of the continued greatness and prestige of ods. Corruption in the Municipal Asthe British Empire in this fact of colo- sembly must be stamped out if it is nial fealty. The sole pity of the development is that it should have been nity to stamp it out. UNDER BRITISH INFLUENCE.

There was considerable significance in several bills introduced in the City Counthe vote by which the pro-Boer resolution, introduced in the lower house of | dent McMath of the Board of Public Imthe Iowa State Legislature, was defeated last Monday.

President McMath's discussion of the Meier "retrenchment" bills shows that in his department, although the ordinances authorize salaries amounting to Sis.420,the actual pay roll is only $25,100. This department the Meier bills find best adapted to "retrenchment" because its head is opposed to gang methods.

One British Admiral expresses the opinion that if the British Navy only had a chance it would be all up with the Boer war. Great Britain might find it to her advantage to give the Boera a const line, on the theory of the doctor who could either the strike in the service and the barnet in the service and service the sound of the law of the lawser. Iowa's German-American Legislators voted with the Democrats and against their own party in favor of a resolution of sympathy for the Boers. American imperialism is justly dreaded by those who have suffered from European imperialism.

Attorney General Crow will be enabled, between now and April 2, to secure much additional evidence for the plaintiff in the Federal Supreme Court case of the People of the Mississippi Valley versus the Chicago Drainage Canal.

It is certainly a significant comment on existing American conditions that the two South African Republics should receive the glad hand from the American people and the marble heart from an American President.

When the next American census is taken none but broncho-busters should apply for the job of enumerating those 8,000,000 Malays who are to be corralled by conquest and governed by force.

Whatever secret pledges President Mc-Kinley may have given to England will be right difficult of fulfillment so long as the people's voice still remains potent in American affairs.

In its fear that the Jefferson Club may rise above party in a desire to insure good government for St. Louis, the Globe-Democrat goes to the other extreme and becomes a machine organ of the bitterest description.

As long as they pay the freight the Trusts know that the Republican party will deliver the goods all right, plat form declarations to the contrary not withstanding.

If Congressman Bartholdt is defeated for renomination by his imperialism be should at least get a McKinley-Chamberlain decoration for devoted service to the cause of the allied land-grabbers.

In laying the facts of Municipal Assembly corruption before the Grand Jury Circuit Attorney Eggers should see to it that none of them escape before being sighted by that body.

Lord Dundonald's cavairy may not yet be in Ladysmith, but it has demonstrated its vast superiority to the rest of the British Army in the important war time knack of "getting there." President McMath of the Board of Public Improvements probably signs himself "Citizen" because he considers that a higher honor than to be part of such an administration. Chleago must have the impression that this country is suffering with over-

MRS. PEATTIE'S LECTURE ON "RUDYARD KIPLING."

Mrs. Ella S. Peattle of Chicago feetured on "Rudyard Kipling" yesterday afternoon before the Alumnae Association of Mary Institute She was introduced by Mrs. James A. Waterworth, president of the association. Mrs. Peattle is a story writer and contributor to the magazines, and is connected with many of the women's clubs of Chicago and the Northwest. Early in the winter she was the guest of Mrs. George H. Shields of this city, and at that time she gave an afternoon of realings from her published stories. Mrs. Peattle had something to say of Kipling's predecessors who told stories of the common people and who took such melancholy views of their lives; and dechired that while Thomas Hardy gave his ideas on the subject of a pure woman; while Richard Watson Gilder unceasingly sang his sonnets; while Sarah Orne Jewett was untiring in her story writing about uninteresting siderly people; Rudyard Kipling sat at the gate and spun his tales, and all the people ran out to hear. Not the cultured few alone; but the worsingman in his greasy apron, the philosopher, the poet, the little child, and the eager young who are nothing, but who walk with eves fixed on the stars.

Kipling, she said, has strengthened the opinion that "a thing worth doing is worth doing well," and the workers, listening rediscover the pleasures of their toll. He tells of men and women, not of conditions and theories; and this, she said, is why he appenis to all classes of people.

The lecturer quoted Kipling's statement that "there are but forty stories in the world, and thirty-nine of these you cannot tell to ladies," and gave a short summary of his early struggles to obtain recognition for his "Plain Tales From the Hills." She reviewed the author as a poet and as a fictionist, staring that his methods are the empt to be elevating in poetry than he does when telling an Indian story. If an idea seems complete to Kipling, there is silence. The reader may guess the rest. His terse and suggestive enting "That's another story," has become proverbial. One of his strongest characteristics is that which runs beneath the tale-a semething greater than the tale.

Kipling has two marked attributes of story-writing. The short bits of poetry at the heads of his stories, that purport to one from obscure sources, but are obvi-ously written by himself, and the fact that he makes his story only incidental, giving e impression that he could tell much me that was interesting if he only would. He is not always pretty reading, according to Mrs. Peattle, for he says himself that "Lo! I have wrought in rude clay, uncouth figures." Kipling never plays with one eye on the gallery, a sure fatality wherever good work is to continue. At the time of the Queen's Jubilee, when every writer of note working and harrying about, and speeding copy to the ends of the earth via cable and telegraph, Kipling walked slowly about, smoking, and apparently in carcless refle-ion on what he saw.

After everylesly else had exhausted him self. Kipling sat down and wrote "The Re-cessional" which will live until even the faintest memory of other people's produ tions at that time have passed into per fect oblivion. Mrs. Peuttle quotes this Richard Harding's observation, and a

Ducts ought to know, for he wrote as much as anybody at that time. Kiplin's infinite pains to inform himself whenever writing a story was made the subject of an important part of Mrs. Peatsnow-bound countries, with Smithsonian In stitute reports as authority. He studied the most minute details about railreading before he produced the sketch of a railroad flight across the continent-a mother going to her dying son. Kipling included all proples in his thought, he embraces the globe which is perhaps one secret of the great affection with which all peoples regard

Henry Fuller, the American wetter, has often declared in Mrs. Peattie's hearing that he cannot find topics to write about, Kipnever so bothered. He takes his plets from every person whom he meets, if he has a mind to use them. Burns set the peech of commoners into the golden frameork of verse; Bret Harte has glorified the rough vernacular of the Wox; but Kipling is more reckless and uses with a lavish hand the varied dialects of varied lamis.

The "Gift of the Sea" was read to illustrate Kipling's tenderness, in which he is otten declared to women to be lacking; and "Song of the Banjo," to show his rich-of illustration and expression, Mrs. Peattie closed her remarks with the quotation: "And the words that had no honor till be came. Lo: He raised them into honor over all," which she declared would be the most fitting epitaph that Kin-

STORIES AND COMMENT ON LOCAL STAGE TOPICS.

Mr. Savage has sent no less than els excellent singers to Music Hall that b. This statement is not meant to ovey the idea that he has not sent more i siz capable performers to us on the rary, the number is closer to slavy, tif e. however, there are six who are mmost great as Interpreters of standard opers in English. One of the six come to us for the first time last night—that is to for the first time since his appear here several sements back, as a not co-prominent member of another organics lion. His name is there is errhold, tener. Mr. Perthold, like mest utiler simpres, areat and small, once sang at thirly's cave. At that time he was so have in his English that he was not a popular member of by company, for that reason slope. Cave patrons were not accustomed to an event when they heard "Muscoste" and "Finafore," Worse than this, Mr. Perfinishs votes was not pleasing in quality, offsench its quantity asserted itself from I wenty third street to Lettingwell aven-Leaving St. Louis, Mr. Berthold sung in the East. After this story, one can readily underhand that such a capable man would push side the difficulties of pronunciation and te unfinished methods of the eld Cave mays and make an artist of himself. So it was no great surprise, therefore, when he ame formard on the Music Hall stage last ight as one of the best figures yet offered by Mr. Savage. His voice, big and satis-fying us of old, is rounded and well man-aged. His briling shows the grave of Delanorth. He has the firm confidence that in telligently applied experience brings. Has height is of the commanding sort so often lacking in our tenor heroes. Last night he did a thing accomplished here by no tener since Prevest-he carried a sustained high note about the stage with the case generally finds in "smart" conversation by a matinee favorite.

Miss Tvonne De Treville, who is almost ute in her dainty graces, was a charming nd vocally excellent Juliet. Miss De Trev. qualifies of pose and person command only diminutiveness when one searches about for adjectives to apply to her. She is quite unlike the conventional prima doping in all of the devices of her acting art. The vel-vet of her voice is there quite as much as it has ever been evidenced, in spite of a singer's statement that "hard work is telling on it.

Viewed as a spectacle, "The Sunken Bell" a desirable theatrical enterrainment. Con-idered as a literary product for considera-on by average minds, it falls of any good orness. Several years ago, in Savannah, Ga., a young actress with hig, black eyes, raven heir and a head full of great thoughts found herself stranded. The company dis-banded after a tempestuous tour and Suvanuah was "a long, long walk from the gay Elalto in New York."

In the town there lived a young actor of some renown. He had played with Booth and Harrett, and now, after a long line of successes for one so young, he was home again on a visit to his mother. The young woman appealed to him, was speedily as sisted and in a few days she was at work again on Broadway. again on Breadway.

Only the other day the young man left a hospital here in St. Louis restored in health and out of an engagement. The young acties, now quite famous, is wealthy into the borgain. Last Saturday she telegraphed from Chicago, where she is playing, and asked the young actor to come to see her. The next day he was engaged to play Romeo and Orlando to the lady's Juliet and Resulind. One of the Castle Square singers was fore the big bill beards in front of Music Hall yesterday afternoon "That's funny." he said, reading the big ne in the middle.

"What's funny?" asked his companion. "Why, that line-one hundred artists."
"I don't understand. Is it an exaggera-

I don't mean that," was the reply. "I'm talking about the word 'artists' You ought to hear the stage manager at rehearsn's call us lobsters."

There is much of feminine form on view on the St. Louis stage these weeks, and there are no tights, either, Miss Harned appeared in one of the scenes of "The Song of the Sword" in a negligee that betrayed her every outline. This week in "The Sunken Bell" she wears what the late Chief Tom Speers of Kansas City would have classified as a Mother Hubbard. It is so close in its adjustment to Miss Harned's figure, however, that tights and a hodice would not disclose a much idea of the form beneath it. Miss Walsh in "Cleopatra" at the Century Theater last pight was similarly attired in most effect tive red. Miss Walsh is more effective as Cleopatra than Mr. MacDawell as Maro Anthony, although both are distinctly over-mormy. Mr. MacDowell is an old-fashioned ranter at times, and Miss Walsh's performunce suffers, in its intense portlans, from a lack of repression. THE REVIEWER.
